The Old Grist Mill

The old grist mill of Hobart's over a hundred years of history burned to embers February 15, 1953, last mark of the horse and buggy era, 107 years old. It was built by George Earle and Lake George was named for him. He dammed Deep River to make the lake and a head of water to turn the stone that ground grain. Indians traded here by the Old Mill, stores and churches were built and Hobart was started as a city that now has a population of 11,000, serving an immediate trade area of 5,000 families covered in this book, plus serving Crisman, McCool, Crocker, Garyton, East Gary, Camp 133, Winfield and Palmer.

Hobart has not had a city directory in about 14 years. The issue of any directory as large as this Hobart area directory for the first time is a tremendous tas'k of both compilation and printing for a weekly newspaper's facilities. It lists over 5,000 names. After an issue is made re-issue of later directories is comparatively simple. In addition to the extra burden of a first issue, repeated losses in mechanical staff, directly and indirectly made by the Korean War, increased our delay. Therefore nearly two years must be added to the ages given for children. All directories are out of date in some measure the day they are issued. Babies are born, people die and move away everyday. We have kept up to date on people through Welcome Wagon in the city and there is added a list of parents with babies in the last 18 months. There is also a section of late comers added. We recommend that those who use this directory for a mailing list address advertising to the street, number and occupant not to the name. We have relied upon the information given to us by our compilers and to those who have volunteered data for us. We do not guarantee its correctness nor do we assume responsibility for errors or omissions. Every effort including pre-publication of names in Hobart Tribune, was made for care and correctness in compiling. We thank all who have assisted us and look forward to re-issue of the directory yearly. The select directory of merchants and services are of those who co-operate in such civic enterprises and extra services to customers and neighbors. Such co-operators are always among leading and trustworthy part of the business community.

Hobart Dam in spring flood discharging water into Deep River behind site of the old grist mill. Anciently, a river boat plied from East Gary through Hobart and to Crown Point, before the dam was built. The dam is between Isaac Walton clubhouse and Hobart Beach, West of Main, Center and Ridge Road.
